Purpose: This seminar provides an overview of the discipline of International Relations. The seminar focuses on the main theoretical trajectories and intellectual disagreements that have shaped the discipline especially over the past quarter century, and on the principal theoretical fault lines that define it today. Readings are mostly drawn from key works from the past few decades, but, where relevant, earlier "classic" pieces are included. This seminar is designed for graduate students in International Relations, political science, security affairs, and related disciplines, who desire to develop or consolidate a solid grasp of the field of International Relations.

Requirements: 1. This is principally a reading and discussion course. Students are expected to come to class fully prepared and to have thoroughly completed the assigned readings before each week's meeting, and to actively participate in class discussions. Regular seminar attendance goes without saying. Required readings will be discussed in class. The "Recommended Supplementary Readings" will not be discussed in class. They are a service to the students and function as a guide for students who want to learn more about a given topic, or who wish to undertake independent research on the issue at hand. When appropriate, the course provider or a participant will present to the seminar a brief summary of work listed under "Recommended Supplementary Readings."
2. Course Participants are asked to write two or more literature critiques of 2-3 pages each (say, 1,000-2,000 words or so). These "reaction papers" will introduce the reading(s) and will be discussed in class together with the readings themselves. The authors of these reviews need to send them via e-mail attachment to the other course participants no later than 24 hours before the seminar meetings. Authors will very briefly present their critique papers in seminar, followed by questions and discussions.

Course participants who want to write a "term paper" based on or in association with this course are welcome to do so.

Requirements to be further specified according to students' interests and course enrollment.

This seminar is worth 20 credits.

Syllabus

Week 1

Introduction and Overview: Beginnings; Evolution; Views of the Discipline Today

Roots, Ancestors, Beginnings

Thucydides, History of the Peloponnesian War [ca. 404 B.C.], I.20-I.23, Penguin Classic Edition, pp. 46-49. Read carefully.

Evolution of a Discipline

The best concise overview of the evolution of “International Relations” as a discipline or field of study is Stanley Hoffmann, "An American Social Science: International Relations" (1977/1987), and is listed below under “Background Reading.” If you wish, have a look at the piece, although we will not discuss it in this course.

Views of International Relations Today

"Table of Contents," pp. v-vii, in Walter Carlsnaes, Thomas Risse and Beth A. Simmons, eds., Handbook of International Relations (Thousand Oaks: Sage, 2002).

"Table of Contents," pp. vii-x, in Christian Reus-Smit and Duncan Snidal, eds., The Oxford Handbook of International Relations (New York: Oxford University Press, 2008).
