

Ph.D. in History & Civilization

Outstanding research environment for scholars from all over Europe and beyond

Florence, Italy

- Leading European institution for post-graduate studies in history and civilization for the early modern and modern period
- A truly European institution supported and sponsored by the members of the European Union
- European research focus, cosmopolitan ambiance, cultural and linguistic diversity
- Focus on the history of Europe in a comparative, transnational and global perspective
- Four-year Ph.D. grants
- Exchange programmes with major European and US universities
- First-class library and data access
- Historical Archives of the European Union
- Extensive computing facilities, language courses and career development

The EUI Department of History and Civilization studies European History from the Renaissance to the present day, recognizing that the idea—or ideas—of Europe remain contested. The Department is committed to seeing European History in relation to other regions and cultures of the world. It distinguishes itself as a place where different historiographical and methodological approaches meet. While most activities are conducted in English, multi-lingualism is encouraged.

The Department strongly promotes comparative and transnational studies of cultural and economic trends; the history of social, political and intellectual movements and traditions; and a gender approach to history. It aims to capture both Europe's past and the study of that past, so as to face the most challenging questions of its present.

Deadline for applications: 31 January 2012

