Covering: the politics of international criminal justice; responsibility; duress; victim-perpetrators; the role of victims in international criminal law; opening and closing statements, press conferences, and much more

What to expect? Not a traditional question and lecture format. Instead, we use theatrical tools to create a critical discussion of core aspects of international criminal law. Concretely: we will have several re-enactments of parts of the Ongwen trial, always followed by reflection sessions. Each reflection session will be guided by an expert on the theme of that session.

Reading international criminal law is one thing; experiencing it is quite another.
