Description

The seminar introduces comparative research and debates on varieties of market economies. It focusses on approaches that seek to conceptualize different models of capitalism in advanced and peripheral capitalist countries, and investigates the role of institutions, interest groups, and ideas in constituting, reproducing and transforming these models. The first part of the course focusses on the influential “Varieties of Capitalism” approach, its precursors and critics, and attempts at expanding it geographically beyond advanced capitalist countries. The second part focuses on issues such as the role of finance and housing, inequality and taxation in contemporary capitalism. The course concludes by bringing politics to political economy.

The aim of the course is twofold. One is to familiarize students with classic texts and recent publications that any emerging scholar of comparative political economy will find useful (the list is in that sense necessary but not sufficient, of course). The other is to help students develop their own research project by encouraging them to see it through the lens of the class readings. Class room discussions will offer ample opportunity to raise concerns related to individual projects.

Requirements

For each session, we ask students to post 2-3 questions about readings (or the relationship among the readings), with each question accompanied by an expository paragraph or two explaining the origin and context of the question. Over the course of the seminar, students must submit questions for 5 of the 10 course sessions (students may choose the sessions for which they post questions, except for the first session). Students are expected to post questions to the course webpage by noon the previous day, as these guide our discussion in the next day’s class. These brief ‘question papers’ are fundamental for the holding of a good discussion of the materials, as is a thorough reading of the assigned readings.
Writing a term paper is encouraged. Your term paper should draw on the literature covered in the course but go well beyond it. The goal of any term paper should be an eventually publishable article. Those who wish to write a term paper should submit it to us by email and in paper copy, with a cc to Monika Rzemieniecka. The deadline for the submission is 18 January 2019.

This seminar is worth 20 credits.
