

RESEARCH TOOLS

Where do I start and how do I browse the Archives' inventories?

The HAEU preserves and makes accessible the archives deposited by EU institutions, bodies and agencies, according to the thirty-year rule governing access to archival material. We also collect and preserve private papers of individuals, movements and international organizations involved in European integration.

We aim at facilitating research on the history of the European Union, promoting public interest in European integration, and enhancing transparency in the functioning of EU Institutions. To start familiarizing yourself with our system, you can also watch our video tutorial (also in French here).

To browse an inventory, start with the search bar on our website. It is the easiest way to begin exploring our collections. Simply type in a few keywords related to what you are looking for, such as a name or a topic. Our search system will use those words to find and show the records that best match your search. This helps to quickly discover relevant material and continue exploring from there.

When you move your cursor over the search bar, you will also see that you can use Boolean operators to refine your search. AND helps to filter the results and OR helps to include more results by searching for alternative words. "Quotation marks" let you search for an exact phrase; brackets help you structure more complex queries; NOT excludes terms you do not want, and the asterisk (*) can be used to search for variant spellings of a word.

When searching the database, it is often a good idea to try keywords in more than one language. Relevant records may use different terms depending on the language of the description, so broadening your search in this way can be very helpful. You can also improve your results by thinking laterally and trying related keywords.

For example, if you start with energy, you could expand your search to include terms such as oil, coal, petrol, or nuclear, as well as equivalents in other languages like énergie, charbon, pétrole, or nucléaire.

For example, if you are researching legislations on women rights, it is useful to start with that general term and then expand your search using more specific keywords in different languages. You could also search for droits de l'homme, droits civiques, droits des femmes, droits sociaux, or égalité de traitement. Depending on the historical period, it may also be helpful to try related expressions such as condition féminine, émancipation des femmes, autorité maritale, droits reproductifs. In the same way, if your research focuses on minorities, you can include droits des minorités or minorités ethniques. Because archival documents reflect the language of their time, using both modern and historical terms can help you find material that might not appear in a more straightforward search.

If needed, you can always click Start a new Search to clear your results and begin again.

Advanced Research

You can also refine your search using the filters available on the page, when you click on Advanced Research. Here you can select the Date Ranges, which allow you to search within a specific time period by selecting a start year and an end year.

Under Digital Available Online, you can limit your results to records with online content, such as audio, video, textual documents, photographs, or external links. The Description Levels filter helps you search at different levels of the archival structure, from broad holdings to individual files or items. You can also focus on particular kinds of creators or sources, such as corporate bodies, individuals, oral history, or interviews.

If you want to search in specific fonds, you can also apply filters to help you further refine your research. Under References, for example, you can search by fonds code and file number. You can also refine your results by language or by type of archival material.

Where to look?

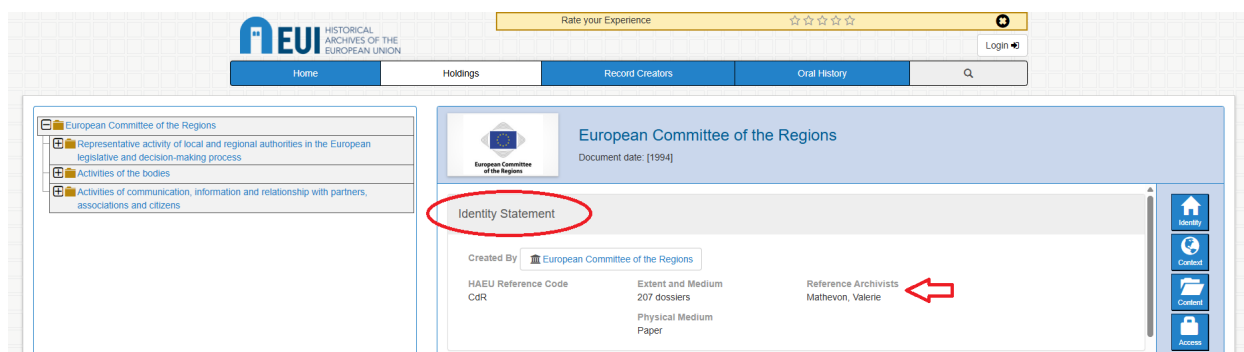

HOLDINGS

By clicking on Holdings, you can view the full list of our fonds, organized into four main groups: EU institutions, Individuals, Corporate Bodies, and Collections.

Keep in mind that the Historical Archives preserve many different fonds, and each fonds has its own structure and organization. For example, part of the fonds of the Council of Ministers is organized by years, you need to browse the sub-fonds of each separate year to access the specific sections (for example, the year 1968).

The Commission fonds – and by extension that of the Directorates-General-, are divided into two distinct parts: the first refers to the period preceding the Merger Treaty (Commission of the European Economic Community, 1958–1967), and the second to the period following its entry into force (European Commission from 1967 onwards). In addition, you can find relevant information under Cabinets Ortoli; Jenkins; Thorn and Delors.

The European Parliament fonds is divided by different legislatures. Hence, you can find the documents from the Assemblée parlementaire européenne et Parlement européen avant l'élection directe until the fifth legislature. For basic information about our holdings and more detailed information on individual fonds, you can consult the Identity Statement of each fonds. This section includes essential details such as the reference code, the extent of the material, and the name of the Reference Archivist for that fonds:

The Economic and Social Committee's inventory - an advisory body established by the Treaty of Rome, which participates in decision-making procedures by issuing opinions, but without legislative influence – is organized by years. You can find the relevant information on how the fonds are organized and its content and structure when you open the page from Holdings. Below, an example from the European Investment Bank:

As you can see, you can also jump to the information on the fonds clicking the lateral list of options.

The fonds were deposited in Florence under specific conditions agreed with the depositor, which means that special consultation rules may apply in some cases. For example, the Court of Justice of the European Union's fonds has specific access rules. The fonds includes documents dealing with judicial affairs, namely original procedure files or case law, which may be consulted exclusively in their digitized version. Their consultation is subject, where applicable, to a prior examination of requests by the CJEU, which considers the protection of privacy, commercial interests, and the confidentiality of deliberations. The access conditions to the files are described in detail in the introduction to each section of the CJEU fonds and in each individual file. You can find the information related to accessibility and consultation in the section "Conditions of Access and Use" of each fonds, like in the example below:

When you browse the Holdings section, you can select the material you wish to consult from the main archival categories. In sections such as EU Institutions, Individuals, and Corporate Bodies, some records are marked with a PDF icon. This shows that the material can be accessed online after you enroll on our website:

Record Creators

This section on Records Creators lists the historical notes on the EU institutions, individuals and corporate bodies that have created, preserved and used the groups of records that constitute the fonds at the Historical Archives. The individuals interviewed as part of oral history programmes are also listed. The notes are structured according to the international archival standard for the description of archival authorities.

The record creators of archival fonds, including those of the collections of National Archives and Ministries of Foreign Affairs Archives, are divided among five groups: EU institutions, Individuals, Corporate Bodies, Collections and Oral History.

EXPLORING RESEARCH TOOLS

For example, let us say you are researching the nuclear policies of the European Community in the 1970s. You type nucléaire into the search bar and receive a large number of results. At this point, you can use the search tools to narrow down and refine your search.

The screenshot displays the 'Historical Archives of the European Union' search interface. The search bar at the top left contains the term 'nucléaire'. Below the search bar, a message states: 'We found additional 11 items for this search in our Audio-visual Collection Database.' The results are displayed in a table with columns for 'Holdings', 'Description Level', 'Dates', 'HAEU Reference Code', and 'Original Reference Code'. The first result is 'Sûreté nucléaire, convention sur la sûreté nucléaire et Sellafield' (PE5-13817). The second result is 'Politique nucléaire de la Communauté et production d'énergie nucléaire' (CEUE_REEX-70). The third result is 'Démantèlement de la centrale nucléaire de Barsebäck dans le cadre du programme suédois de déclassement' (PE4-32560). The fourth result is 'Energie nucléaire' (CEUE_AFEF-757). On the right side, the 'Refine Results' panel is visible, showing filters for 'Fonds' (Secretariat général, Recherche et enseignement, Parlement européen, etc.) and 'Description Levels' (Dossier/Item, Series, Individuals, Fonds, Interviews, Corporate Bodies). A red arrow points to the search bar, another to the 'Fonds' filter, and a third to the 'Description Levels' filter. Below the main results, a date range filter is shown with options: 1970 - 1979 (827), 1980 - 1989 (1062), 1990 - 1999 (771), and 2000 - 2009 (179). A 'Refine Search' button is located at the bottom right of the date range filter.

You can now narrow the results using filters such as fonds, description level, date range, online availability, language, type of archival material, or access level. After that, you can begin looking through the list of items that match your search.

Suppose you are specifically interested in Council documents. In the list of results, you come across a sub-series dedicated to energy and nuclear matters:

Historical Notes
Lors du Traité de fusion des institutions communautaires de 1967, le Conseil spécial de ministres de la Communauté Européenne du charbon et de l'acier et le Conseil de l'Euratom (en collaboration avec d'autres institutions indépendantes) ont fusionné pour créer le Conseil de la Communauté économique européenne, qui consiste en un unique Conseil des Communautés européennes. En 1993, le Conseil est renommé Conseil de l'Union européenne à la suite de l'institution de l'Union européenne par le Traité sur l'Union européenne (Traité de Maastricht). Ce traité a renforcé le Conseil en donnant au système des trois piliers plus d'éléments intergouvernementaux. Cependant, en même temps, le Parlement européen et la Commission européenne sont renforcés au sein du pilier communautaire, limitant la capacité du Conseil à agir indépendamment.

Le Traité de l'Union européenne met fin au système de piliers et crée l'avantgarde de nouveau au Parlement. Le Haut-commissariat du Conseil et le Directeur de la politique étrangère fusionnent et cette developpement et les principes supranationaux.

Le Conseil siège en 10 différentes configurations de 28 ministres nationaux (un par état membre). La composition exacte des participants varie selon le sujet en considération. Par exemple, lorsque le débat concerne la politique agricole, le Conseil est composé des 28 ministres compétents en la matière (les Commissaires européens compétents contribuent mais ne participent pas au vote).

La présidence du Conseil fait l'objet d'une rotation entre les gouvernements des états membres de l'UE tous les six mois. Les ministres compétents du pays exerçant la présidence assurent le bon fonctionnement des réunions et établissent l'ordre du jour. La continuité entre les présidences est assurée par un accord selon lequel trois présidences successives, appelées « trio des présidences », doivent partager le même programme politique. Le Conseil des affaires étrangères (ministres des affaires étrangères nationaux) est cependant présidé par le Haut Représentant de l'Union pour les affaires étrangères et la politique de sécurité.

Dans la plupart des cas, les décisions sont votées à la majorité qualifiée, sinon à l'unanimité. Dans le cas d'un vote à l'unanimité, seule la consultation du Parlement est requise. Mais le plus souvent, la procédure législative ordinaire s'applique; ce qui signifie que le Conseil et le Parlement partagent équitablement les pouvoirs législatifs et budgétaires et doivent trouver un accord pour qu'une proposition soit adoptée. Dans quelques cas précis, le Conseil peut lui-même proposer de nouvelles lois européennes.

La Direction générale du Conseil de l'Union européenne assiste le Conseil de l'Union européenne, et la Présidence du Conseil de l'Union européenne, le Conseil européen et le président du Conseil européen. Le Secrétariat est présidé par le Secrétaire général du Conseil de l'Union européenne. Il est composé de sept directions générales, chacune étant administrée par un directeur-général.
