Director of project	Prof. Laura Lee DOWNS
Title of project	Social politics in European borderlands: A comparative and transnational study, 1870s-1990s (SOCIOBORD)
Job description	SOCIOBORD is a 5-year ERC project starting in September 2020. It seeks to reframe the history of welfare and social care in modern Europe by restoring to view the contribution of families and associations to shaping welfare systems in three borderland regions of north-western, eastern, and south-eastern Europe from the 1870s till the 1990s. By focusing on the interactions among local actors and following developments from the late 19th century to the 1990s, this project turns our attention to the co-construction of welfare by public and private actors in highly mixed borderlands, where the reach of central states often fluctuated and a range of local welfare structures, based on national, but also non-national forms of identity/solidarity (e.g., occupation, gender or religion) flourished. We will do this by conducting intensively researched local case studies in

	the chosen borderland regions: Galicia, the North-eastern Adriatic and the Franco/Belgian/German border regions. Each case study will investigate how families and voluntary associations negotiated over entitlements to welfare, focusing in particular on support to children, veterans and working-class women. The case studies will then be placed in comparative and transnational frameworks so as to facilitate the analysis of similarities and differences between north-western, eastern and south-eastern borderlands while tracing the circulation of ideas, people and practices. Rather than treating borderlands as peripheries, SOCIOBORD approaches them as laboratories for the development of social protection, thanks to the dense variety of actors competing for influence over their putative objects of assistance and for access to material resources. Ultimately, the goal is to restore to view the vital role that families and voluntary welfare associations have long played in creating and delivering new forms of social welfare in Europe's many borderland regions. For the long-range historical study of local actors' ideas and practices around social welfare in European borderlands has much to tell us about the development of welfare across Europe in general. The Research Fellow will undertake the following tasks: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Develop and carry out at least one and up to two case studies for a given borderland • Contribute to the development of SOCIOBORD's comparative and transnational methodologies • Contribute to the project's collective publications • Mentor early career researchers, guiding them in the development and elaboration of their individual case studies • Design and convene research seminars (with the project's director) • Co-design and coordinate research activities of remote international teams and in-house researchers • Co-design and execute collective publications • Ensure the wide dissemination of SOCIOBORD's research results through the organization of events for academic and non-academic audiences and on-line visibility
